

The method for producing a complex of biologically active substances with anabolic and actoprotective action includes the extraction of herbal material with hot water followed by filtration and drying. As the herbal raw material the roots of the Washington lupine is used. The extraction is performed at the specified temperatures in two stages with different duration.